The London Towas says: The year of 1880 has been one of solid business in almost every direction and of foolish speculation in a few. The beginning only of the speculative period has been reached, and it may be years before we reach its highest. From all appearance, both France and the United States are far ahead of us in this direction, and on them principally the duration of the time them principally the duration of the time of quiet business naturally would seem to depend. The prodigious absorption of capi-tal in public works now going on- in France may at once lead to temporarily unpleasant results to speculators for a rise, but the new year will be begun hopefully, and such is the temper of the stock markets that a still higher range of prices need surprise nobody. The London Times, in an editorial, says:

"A new Irish land bill has, we believe, been framed, with a view to supplementing or repairing certain defects which experience has shown to exist in the land act of 1876, and not with a view of introducing new principles reversing it. The bill is little likely to satisfy those friends of Ireland who are engaged in misnight drills of deluded peasantry. The proposed movements of flying columns will exercise more persuasion with malcontents who may be Fenians under new names than any legislative measure."

The Doblin correspondent of a London journal says he has authority for stating that flying columns were found necessary in consequence of the night drilling of armed men, police patrols in many cases having had to avoid parties drilling.
